

Do not permit studios to ram this abomination down our throats.

In their self-centered pursuit of profit and control, they propose to force our society to abrogate our rights. These rights were carefully considered and granted in the course of determining how to best advance our state of the art; how to best learn, grow and exploit our collective knowledge for the betterment of all.

It's time to push back, and tell those with parochial interests that this is a precious, public resource over which we are having this discourse. They are not free to dictate terms.

Our existing copyright laws provide a reasonable framework for compromise between the publisher's interest, and the goals and objectives of our greater society. Do not allow them to undo Sony v. Universal Studios.